

Armagnacs

Armagnac is a brandy that comes only from a very small, very special region in France with a special distillation method designed to capture a fuller flavor than any other brandy in the world. While it is generally fuller-bodied, it becomes so elegant with age that even experts find it difficult to distinguish a fine aged Armagnac from a fine aged Cognac — and many prefer Armagnac.

Eaux-De-Vie

These are spirits distilled from fruit- except for calvados and other aged eaux-de-vie (plural).

Sip them slowly for best pleasure.

APPLE

Calvados comes from the Normandy Region of France. It is made like Cognac in that it is distilled twice. Calvados is becoming increasingly popular as people like its clean, dry, apple taste.

Scotches

Scotch may be enjoyed the way cognac is enjoyed — as a highball, or as a fine digestif.

A blended whisky contains about 5 to 40 percent malt whisky, with the remainder being grain whisky. The 40 percent that is malt whisky may contain as many as 40 different single malt whiskies. Blended whiskies tend to be a little softer than single malt whiskies.

A single malt whisky is 100 percent malt whisky made by a single distiller. Scotch is similar to wine in that each whisky reflects the specific malt, water and blending skills of that distiller, making each single malt unique. You may prefer the full flavored, robust style of the Highland single malts, the smoother, mild style of the Lowlands and Campbeltown, or the Islay malts with their full, smoky flavor that can remind you of the sea.

Aged scotch may return as much or more pleasure as does aged Cognac or Armagmac because of the interesting character and flavor variances that age brings out between the different single malts.
